Let's Start!

Who should they hire?

Learning Outcome

Express duty, advice, willingness, or intention to do something in spoken or written texts and in work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- Do you think it is important to hire someone with a lot of experience?
- What are other things that should be considered when hiring a new employee?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about work and dealing with customers.
- I can express that a fairly certain condition will be fulfilled using when or if.
- I can express duty or obligation in the present.

Let's Explore!

It's all about recruitment!

* "Recruitment" is the process of finding people to work for a company.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Employees are the most important part of any business and finding the right ones can be a challenge. In order to ensure that you have a professional and qualified staff, you have got to establish some effective hiring practices before you begin your recruitment search. If you are able to take a longer view of the hiring process, you will find talented and experienced employees to provide good customer service and help maintain the long-term profitability of your business.

A first step is to look at your recruitment sources to determine which employment agencies have recommended qualified, effective employees. You should also evaluate whether any nearby colleges or online job search websites have resulted in the hiring of quality employees. You must track the performance of all your recruitment sources and utilize only the best ones to look for employees for your restaurant.

If you hire someone with restaurant experience, they will be familiar with the processes and skills needed for the job and understand the flexibility needed in scheduling. If you receive an application from someone who has worked in several capacities, from host to server to kitchen staff, you have to consider that applicant seriously. When you find yourself short-staffed, an employee who can fill in where needed will be an invaluable addition to your team.

Your current staff can also recommend people for available restaurant positions. If you hire someone recommended by a current staff member, you will also get a lot of help with training. A friend will likely want to help a new employee learn the ropes.

You must seek out new employees that will fit into the culture and dynamic of your restaurant. You should come up with interview questions that evaluate the interviewee's attitude toward teamwork.

Before you start to interview candidates, you have got to list which skills you require your employees to have, for example, problem-solving skills and diplomacy, efficiency, organization and prioritization skills, and the ability to work well under pressure. If you can ask interview questions that allow the candidate to show you their skills, you will have a clear idea of the contribution that person will be able to make to your restaurant.

Extension Activity

Create a celebrity staff list of your own company.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Imagine that you have created your own company. Give your company a name.
- Decide on 8-10 well-known people from the world of sports, politics, entertainment, science, history, business, and so on that you have to hire to help you in your company. You can assign them job titles if you want to be more creative (managers, regular employees, account manager, etc.).
- Present your "staff" list in a group.
- Discuss your choices. Say who you chose and why.
- In groups, choose 10 people to hire from everyone's staff list.
- Remember to include everyone in the discussion and try to reach a compromise about who to "fire" and who to keep.

Learning Points

The First Conditional

You use the First Conditional with if-clauses to exchange opinions about possible outcomes in the present or in the future.

You use the First Conditional to say it's possible that you will or will not do something. In that condition, something else may, may not, will or will not happen. The condition is in the present. The outcome is not in the present, but in the future.

Example: If you focus more on our customers, they'll leave a larger tip.

The result (leaving a larger tip) depends on whether the condition is met (focus more on customers).

Structure: If + Present Simple, ... will + verb ...

Will + verb ... If + Present Simple

Examples:

- If you are able to take a longer view of the hiring process, you will find talented and experienced employees.
- If you hire someone with restaurant experience, they will be familiar with the processes and skills needed for the job.
- If you hire someone recommended by a current staff member, you will also get a lot of help with training.
- If you can ask interview questions that allow the candidate to show you their skills, you will have a clear idea of the contribution that person will be able to make.

Learning Points

Modals for Duty or Obligation

You can use a variety of modals to talk about duties and obligations, to express what someone is responsible for and to give strong advice and recommendations.

Let's look at the modals must, have to, have got to, and should.

You use the modal must when you decide for yourself what is necessary.

Example: I must show them I can live up to their expectations.

You use have to and have got to before verbs that talk about necessity. Have got to is more casual. Have to implies that someone else imposed the necessity on you.

Examples: You have to buckle down Kristi, and get it done.

I've got to work systematically.

Should is a modal you can use to give advice and to talk about duty.

Examples: You should make sure you meet these deadlines. (advice)

You should take this responsibility seriously. (duty)

Read the following examples from the text:

Examples:

- You have to consider that applicant seriously.
- You must seek out new employees that will fit into the culture and dynamic of your restaurant.
- You have got to list which skills you require your employees to have.
